

I am very opposed to requiring copy protection on HDTV receivers to block recording of HDTV broadcasts. This would block me from perfectly fair and legal use of my VCR or any other recording device. Once HDTV becomes the standard, CBS will NOT refuse to broadcast in it. This is just a hissy-fit tactic to block a technology that the public wants. If recording a TV show is legal and OK now, why wouldn't it be the same for HDTV? Claiming that such a technology threatens their business model is simply not an argument with any truth to it.
